A Tough UK Debate Team

It is a debate, it is hard work. It is self-realization. And outside the sports arena probably no other academic area requires as much self-discipline.

It is the kind of debate that competes with the best student minds in the country today. Often uncelebrated, it often unnoticed, but with a tradition that goes back to the Socratic of ancient Greece, it is one contest that has often missed more than the plane.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.

Jeff Jones and Steve Maness are the University of Kentucky's top debaters. As a team, they won first place in the invitational at West Virginia University and Carrollton in mid-February. They got to the state-finals just two weeks ago, in one of the last games before the National Debate Tournament at Arizona University in Tucson, the third weekend of April, and emerged unscathed from the fray.